Strategic Partners – Scientific Builders

For more than 50 years, Keystone Symposia, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization, has championed the belief that partnerships between academia and industry accelerate scientific discovery, translational progress, and improved patient outcomes. Foundations and life sciences organizations have long been integral to advancing our mission, helping foster collaboration, connect diverse perspectives, and drive innovative solutions to today's most pressing scientific, medical, and global health challenges.

Contributions at these levels provide unrestricted support through the Director's Fund, benefiting our full portfolio of conferences. Backed by leading foundations and biotechnology, pharmaceutical, and life sciences organizations, these investments help create transformative platforms that unite influential researchers, thought leaders, and decision-makers while expanding opportunities for the next generation of scientists.

I've been going to Keystone conferences since I was a graduate student. Later in my graduate career, I came to Keystone and presented a poster, and I actually found my postdoctoral mentor at a Keystone meeting. Throughout the years, I went to many more Keystone meetings. As a postdoc I was funded for a travel scholarship many times and then as an independent researcher, I had the opportunity to receive a Keystone Fellowship position and that's been really valuable to me as well. I've been able to stay involved in the Keystone academic community. Keystone Symposia has been in an integral part of my professional success.
